

CALL FOR PROPOSALS

for the 3rd Annual Identity and Education Conference: Voices Advocating For Change

Friday, March 22, 2019, 8am- 1pm, at Fairfield University

Sponsored by the Fairfield Warde High School Voices for Equity (FWVE) and the Fairfield University Graduate School of Education & Allied Professionals

Your Voice Can Do More Than You Think It Can! There comes a time to empower the voices of equity. Now is a time to listen to our students and teachers; a time to act together for educational justice. We are looking to amplify the voices of groups of students (and their allies) who often are not heard in their schools due to race, gender, ethnicity, culture or family wealth.

We invite students and teachers to present at a student-driven conference. Presenters will share stories/experiences through a variety of media/art, teaching practices, club activities, and research designed to amplify student voices, break down barriers, and create common understanding. The purpose of this conference is to empower each other to lead the way to equity in education.

Students: Students, you are invited to create a presentation that explains how you make your voice heard in your school and in your community. How are you advocating for change? How are you empowering yourself and others? How do you make change in your school for voices that are under-represented? How are you using the arts and/or media as a means of action?

Educators: Teachers/professors, administrators, and other educational practitioners are also invited to submit presentation proposals. How do you or your colleagues encourage students to talk about and work with issues of equity within your curriculum? What innovative classroom strategies are you using to promote equity and engage students? How do you empower students to self-advocate for their identity? How are you getting people involved in the larger discussion of equity in your school?
