CAS SPRING CONFERENCE & 54TH ANNUAL MEETING

Teaching the Skills of the 21st Century

Thursday, May 10, 2007
Connecticut Grand Hotel, Waterbury

Steve Barkley, the executive vice president of Performance Learning Systems Inc., and an internationally recognized teacher-educator will be the keynote speaker for the CAS Spring Conference and Annual Meeting,

May 10, 2007. His expertise is in designing training programs to meet the criteria set by state departments of education and school districts and in helping district personnel develop staff development models.

As author of "Quality Teaching in a Culture of Coaching," he explains that as the world changes, so does teaching. Steve will present an overview of the skills and habits students need in the workplace of tomorrow. He'll explore issues of change and how they affect us as leaders and educators, and will discuss the prerequisite skills for students to graduate as contributing citizens prepared for college and work in global society.
